Welcome address

In the landscape of cancer research, the increasing knowledge about the biology of neoplastic cells but also of tumor microenvironment has provided a new level of complexity for development of molecular targeted drugs and improvements of anticancer therapy.

The 2nd International Michelangelo Conference focuses on the recent improvements in understanding the crosstalk between different signaling pathways and combining different targeted drugs as strategy to reduce the risk of tumor resistance. In particular an interesting and exciting topic of the discussion will be the role of the stroma in the modulation of immune anti-tumor response as innovative and strategic target for anticancer therapy.
